Increments

By Karen Mathieson

Some there are, it's sad to tell,
 who tote an inner measuring tape.
They meter out the good they do with the care you'd use to peel a grape.

Asked for a peck, much less a bushel,
 such folk may find the giving hard.
Break a glass and your absolution is duly tendered, shard by shard.

What a joy to have companions
 who do not calculate their smiles,
But cheerfully, with easy manner,
 walk with us the extra miles.
